About 40 from South Paris high school came over, Monday night, to attend the lyceum of the Norway high school. The question of the amount of good which would result from paving Main street was ably discussed and finally decided in favor of those opposed. The other exercises were very interesting. The visitors helped out on debate and Mr. Lambe, the Paris superintendent, made a neat speech. About 10 o'clock the exercises closed.

"The Vendetta" is a story of the heart, grandly told and wonderfully staged. From the moment the curtain rises on the first act until it falls on that sensation in electrical effects, the "Burning of Paris," the audience never for an instant loses its interest. The outbreak at the prison in Toulon, the scene at the casino, Monte Carlo, the weird effect of the search light illuminating the water after the collision of the ocean steamers are scenes that are well worth seeing. "The Vendetta" will be presented at Norway Opera House.

Wrong Impression Corrected.

We were somewhat surprised when we noticed going the rounds of newspapers, notably the Lewiston Journal and Portland Transcript, this item, "There is considerable sickness in Norway. One physician is said to have 250 patients." We are not so much surprised at the appearance of the item as we are at the absence of fact in the item, but for the interest of the town of Norway we think it would be better to have fewer items of news than to have so many that are not so. A stranger would have the impression that Norway is a very unhealthy place, while facts show it to be just the reverse. It may be that a physician of Norway has 250 patients but they are not in Norway, if they are they are not much sick.

They that are whole need not a physician but they that are sick, and we venture the assertion that there is as little sickness in Norway per capita as in any town in the county, or state even.

As a member of the local Board of Health of the town of Norway for the past five years, associated with two of the leading physicians of the town on the Board, we have had some opportunity to know something of the sickness in the town during that period of time.

E. H. BROWN.

The Lillian Tucker Company, which is well and favorably known here, will play a week's engagement at the Norway Opera House, commencing Feb. 24th. A repertoire of entirely new plays will be presented during this engagement. Many novelties have been added since this company last appeared here, in the way of specialties, and all lovers of strictly first-class entertainment can look forward with pleasure to the engagement of Miss Tucker and her company of talented players. The company is now fulfilling a seven weeks' engagement in the city of Quebec, where they have made a phenomenal success. Manager Bullock will carry on the road the same company, scenery, calcium light, etc., used in playing the large cities of New England and Canada. The entire repertoire of plays will be announced later. We clip the following from The Quebec Daily Telegraph:—"THEATRE ROYAL.—'Dad's Girl,' a beautiful New England comedy drama, was presented last night, to the best of satisfaction to the audience. The play is one of the best so far presented by the Lillian Tucker Company during their engagement of the past five weeks. Miss Tucker made a sweet Mercy Baxter and played the part with ease and naturalness. Jethro Baxter, the simple hearted old farmer, was well played by Mr. Vaught. Mr. Whittier was very funny in Philander Potts and his songs were rendered in fine style and were much appreciated. The other members did full justice to their respective parts." 7-8

The February term of the Supreme Judicial Court opened in the new Court House at South Paris, Tuesday morning. Hon. Enoch Foster of Bethel is the judge presiding for this first term.

The accident on the Grand Trunk delayed the Tuesday morning train and Judge Foster did not arrive till afternoon. The lawyers and jurymen wandered about the court house like sheep without a shepherd. The gallery was filled with people anxiously and patiently waiting for the judge who didn't come. Shortly after 11 o'cloc., the crier H. E. Hammond proclaimed, that by order of the sheriff, court was postponed till 2 o'clock p. m.

A large concourse of citizens were present at 2 o'clock, the hour to which adjournment had been made. Judge Foster announced that the hour from 2 till 3 would be occupied with remarks from those present.

Judge Cornish, Wilson of the probate court, welcomed the supreme court and all who attend its sessions to the new county buildings at South Paris. George D. Bisbee arose and the smile of welcoming coupled with a bow as noticed that his face lacked the flowing mustache that had so long been a joy to the admirers of manly beauty. He made some facetious remarks about the Bethel delegation improving the delay by preparing speeches while the rest waited. A. E. Herrick of Bethel made a neat speech in reply to Mr. Bisbee's remarks and insinuations. Judge H. C. Davis of Norway, Municipal Court, James S. Wright of South Paris and John P. Swasey talked very pleasantly about the "late unpleasantness" of the spring of 1893, and were even boastful of Oxford County's standing in the world. Judge Foster paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of his old friend of the bar and bench, Judge W. W. Virgin, and asked for a word from his son, H. R. Virgin of Portland. Mr. Virgin responded in the request with a glowing tribute to Maine and Oxford County, and the suitableness of the new buildings for such a worthy county as this. There were pleasant remarks from S. S. Stearns of Norway, Col. A. S. Austin of Paris and editor Atwood of the Democrat.

At three o'clock, court was opened with the usual ceremonies. James R. Tucker of Mexico is the deputy sheriff in charge of the grand jury. The traverse juries were then impaneled. The first jury, in charge of deputy sheriff A. F. Bassett of Norway, is as follows:

J. C. Billings, Bethel, foreman.
Addison J. Abbott, Paris.
Hollis I. Abbott, Upton.
Thos. J. Allard, Brownfield.
Joseph F. Benson, Sumner.
Sam'l H. Colby, Denmark.
Joseph B. Cole, Paris.
A. T. Crocker, Norway.
Thos. R. Day, Woodstock.
Albert Dunn, Canton.
Loton W. Flint, Waterford.
Roswell Frost, Norway.

Deputy sheriff James L. Parker of Norway is in charge of the second jury:

John M. Gammon, Dixfield, foreman.
William G. Given, Hebron.
Seth Ames, Oxford.
Reuben S. Moulton, Hiram.
Richard F. Norton, Porter.
H. W. Palmer, Lovell.
A. G. Pearson, Buckfield.
Wm. W. Perkins, Andover.
H. C. Philbrook, Bethel.
F. S. Robinson, Peru.
Geo. R. Russell, Hartford.
Lewis A. Sawin, Albany.

The supernumeraries were:

G. T. Silver, Rumford.
George Walker, Fryeburg.
F. O. Walker, Rumford.

F. O. Walker was excused.

The routine business of calling the docket and assigning cases for trial occupied the rest of the afternoon.

Wednesday morning, routine business was transacted during the first hour. The juries came in at 10 o'clock. It appearing that all cases for Wednesday and Thursday would be tried before the judge only, both juries were excused till 10 o'clock, Friday. The greater number of them went home.

The grand jury was busy. We heard rumors that but little would come before them.

The case of Mrs. Amelia Morgan vs. J. Frank Howland was called. This was on account of a claim against the Dorchester Press Co, of Dorchester, Mass., in which Mr. Howland is a stockholder. Action was brought in Maine because the Dorchester Press Co. was organized under the Maine laws. Mr. Howland owns real estate known as "Mountain View Farm" in Paris. Joseph Cummings of Boston was attorney for the plaintiff, and had associated with him Judge G. A. Wilson. J. S. Wright was attorney for Mr. Howland. A lot of documentary evidence was submitted relative to the formation of the stock company and how Mr. Howland became possessed of its shares, endorsed its paper and became liable for its debts. Ernest H. Morgan, a printer who had worked for and been a stockholder in the company, acting for a time as treasurer, testified as to his wife, the plaintiff, working for the company, several years. He claimed that Mr. Howland's stock was a gift and acquired without consideration and that defendant had by endorsement become liable for the company's debts as well as by non payment for his shares of stock. He further testified that Mr. Howland loaned the company some money, and took a mortgage on the plant, foreclosed the mortgage and sold the business at auction; that he paid part of the debts and dissolved the company, after getting control of the stock, and this action was to force him to pay a remaining debt. Mr. Howland didn't know anything about Mrs. Morgan's claim, for it was contracted before he had anything to do with the company, said he had paid out more than he received, acquired the stock by lawful transfer from lawful owners, and was not holden for the claim. His evidence showed that a newspaper is a pretty expensive luxury. The case hinges on the question of lawful payment by Mr. Howland for stock he had in the company. Judge Foster sent it up to the full bench. This was the first case in the new court-house. Both parties reside in Boston.

There were hearings on a couple of divorce cases, Wednesday afternoon. Decision was reserved.

The jailer brings the prisoners from the Paris Hill jail. As the new jail is not quite ready for occupancy a guard is kept over the prisoners. The reason was the cells for the jail failed to arrive on schedule time and so the prisoners have to be herded together.

Wm. Woodsum of West Peru was one of the most interested people present. He has recollections of the stirring times when he walked erect between two factions who were fighting for location of the court house. He was then chairman of the County Commissioners.

A long term of court is in prospect, next week will be fully occupied and considerable of the third week.

Before the adjournment of court, the citizens of South Paris are planning to hold a rousing temperance rally. This will be done to give expression of the strong prohibition sentiment that prevails at the county seat.

Judge G. F. Clifford of Cornish remarked that he had been more or less acquainted with the members of Oxford County bar for the past thirty years and he had always considered them to be a rather homely set of men, but when he viewed the members of the bar from the Law Library, Tuesday afternoon, he was forced to change his mind and conclude that they were as fine a looking set of men as he had ever seen in a Court House in Maine. "It must be owing to the new surroundings," said the judge, "It is a finely arranged Court House and one the people may well be pleased with."

The citizens of Norway give a reception and banquet at Beal's Hotel, from 7.30 to 12, Tuesday evening, Feb. 18, in honor of Judge Enoch Foster and the members of the Oxford County Bar.

The Pullman car service of the Grand Trunk railway is about to be completely reorganized. Twelve new Pullmans are being constructed in Chicago and eighteen in the G. T. R. shops in Montreal. It is expected that they will be ready for spring traffic. The cost of construction of these cars runs between $18,000 and $20,000 each. The new cars will be constructed with observation platforms and of course will be vestibuled. The Pullmans now in use will be transferred into colonist sleepers and excursion. The cars will be lighted by the Pintsch light, which is a gas light well known in car lighting in the United States. As a result, the Safety Car Heating and Lighting Company of New York have arranged with the G. T. R. Company to open a factory on Aqueduct Street, Montreal.

NEW ENGLAND FARMING.

Farmers Who Have Adapted Themselves to the New Conditions Are Prosperous.

There was a time, not so very long ago, when it was prophesied that the farming lands of New England would become a desert and western competition was greatly feared. But, as a Vermont farmer explains in a letter to Ohio Farmer, the New England farmers have adapted themselves to new conditions, some quickly, some slowly; a few are clinging to the old ruts, but the majority are learning to grow farm products at a far less cost than formerly. He says:

The silo has been a great help; machinery has done much for us. Wages are high here, nearly as high as when farm products were much higher than now. In fact, the cost of farm help is one of our greatest drawbacks. But we have had to learn to do with little hired help and to depend more and more upon machinery. The greatest expenses are for western feed and for fertilizers. But less cornmeal will be bought this year than usual, as there were ten acres of corn planted this year where there was only one a few years ago. Farmers used to depend too much upon grass, and many do still, but they are learning that it is better to plant more corn. Very little wheat is grown, also less and less oats and barley. The practice of sowing grass seed in corn at the last time of going through with the weeder is becoming quite common. Land which will not bear a ton of hay will bear corn to an amount equivalent to three tons or more, while the fertilizer does not cost the price of one ton of hay.

Farms near the cities are devoted to market gardening; those farther away to the milk supply of the cities and towns, while those at a distance from the cities are devoted to butter and cheese making. Fruits is grown in some sections, also potatoes, but dairying in some form is the chief dependence of the New England farmer. The Jersey cow is the favorite. Many creameries have been built, the largest in the world, being located at St. Albans, Vt. Skimming stations are located at many points where they are convenient of access. The milk is taken to these, run through the separator, the skimmilk carried back to the farm, and the cream taken to the central station, where it is made into butter. The buttermilk is fed to hogs, which are kept on a farm owned by the creamery men. Many farmers use small separators run by hand, or bull power. The butter is then either sent to commission houses or private customers, or is sold to local butter buyers, who pay cash and according to quality.

Applying Manure.

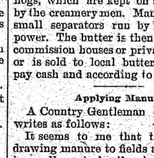
A Country Gentleman correspondent writes as follows:

It seems to me that the practice of drawing manure to fields and placing it in small conical piles has nothing to commend it. This method is often employed when the manure is wanted in spring for top dressing, but usually there is a sod field that can use the manure as soon as made and will more than double in value to a spring crop by making an increased vegetable growth for the soil. When the manure is put on the surface of a field intended for a plowed crop, it is only a source of fertility. When it goes on the sod or on ground intended for wheat and grass, it helps the sod to furnish a greater store of plant food. If it can be spread evenly on the surface, ten loads per acre do more to increase the fertility of the farm than 15 loads used on bare land.

The truck patches get too great a share of manure. There should be rotation with clover here as well as in other fields, and then one part of the farm would not be robbed to feed another. The chance of an abundant yield of "truck" is enticing, but in the end the manure will give best returns on the thin portions of fields where the sod is or promises to be light. Evenness in fields is most desirable, and we should look to the barnyard manure to secure it. Heavy applications on a small area or the plowing under of manure are not calculated to make the best returns in a series of years when the supply is relatively small.

A Farm Convenience.

It is often desired to weigh out small lots of loose hay, and when this is the case the arrangement of a rope in the form shown herewith is most convenient. Farm Journal tells all about it as follows:



TO WEIGH LOOSE HAY.

Make a loop of a long rope and stretch it out thrown upon it, gather the two ends of the loop and pass one through the other as shown and hook the upper part into the hook of the steelyards.

SHEERS TWAIN

BY JOHN MACNIE, AUTHOR OF "THE BOY'S PLAYGROUND"

[Copyright, 1895, by Frederick A. Stokes Company.]

"Sir, by what right do you insult two defenseless women?"

The sergeant's breath came and went in quick gasps. Could he risk calling his superior officer to a sense of what was proper and rely on Townley, the private, and the scout becoming temporarily deaf? For he knew if he spoke it meant a serious charge of insubordination against him. But the officer himself released his subordinate from his difficulty and brought about his own undoing. He stared blankly at her for a moment, as if he had not rightly heard; then, realizing that his authority—a high and mighty officer's of the Northwest mounted police—had been called in question by a frail girl, his round, moonlike face became flushed and purple—the change was inconsiderable from its normal one—as he blurted out in a tone meant to impress the entire party and overawe this spirited girl in particular:

"Girl, do you know who and what I am?"

"You have just enlightened us on these points," she answered in a strangely quiet and subdued manner, "for your actions and a certain reputation are identical."

"Eh—what?" he asked uneasily. He had not exactly followed her, but he thought his manner had evidently impressed this wayward girl. "Who and what am I then?"

"An officer of the Northwest mounted police," she replied calmly, "and a cad of the first water!"

As Pierre (who chuckled to himself for nearly two hours after this speech) said to Dick Townley that night, the girl was indeed a "chip of the old block!"

CHAPTER IV.

The sergeant rose to his feet. He could not sit by any longer and be an impassive witness of such a scene. To say that he felt heartily ashamed at this moment of the cloth he wore and for the well merited rebuke just accorded it by this beautiful and indignant girl were putting it mildly.

Jamie sat speechless, with his dark eyes fairly bulging out of his head. That a mere slip of a girl should have the audacity to openly insult him—of course there was no question of insult in so far as his conduct in relation to her was concerned—an officer and a gentleman—oh, of course, a gentleman—and before his subordinates, too—was a thing so unparalleled in Inspector Jamie Bommder's vast experience (in the great lone land) that it left him literally incapable of thought or action. To use one of his own beautiful and choice expressions, he was "teetotally flabbergasted" for the moment. The private had risen with the sergeant and made for the door. But the conduct of the little scout was most remarkable, for, on rising, he had, curiously enough, kicked his hat into a corner of the room and appeared to have considerable difficulty in picking it up again. He reminded one of an ostrich with its head stuck in a hole and its huge body gravitating aimlessly round it. He—Pierre—however, snorted in a most peculiar and suspicious fashion.

But it was the old half breed woman who took advantage of the situation to interfere on behalf of her young mistress and put a check to the uncalled for impertinence of the gallant officer. Her dark face became sallow; her black, sharp eyes sparkled ominously; her high, quavering voice betrayed her excitable Gallic origin as she faced the somewhat surprised officer and cried, with a determined stamp of her foot:

"You shall not—I say you shall not, no matter what you are, sit here and insult my young mistress. If you cannot see you are an unwelcome convie in this room, you must be asked to relieve us of your presence and get out of it! We cannot in this storm ask you to leave the house, but there is one large room you can have; it is to the right of the passage as you come in, with a stove in it. You will be good enough to remain in it while you have to stop here. You are evidently not accustomed to the society of women. Therefore, as long as you are in this house do not dare to enter this room again. You see this saucepan of water on the fire? It will boil in a few seconds. It shall remain there, and I swear by the Holy Virgin over your face I will throw it if you as much as show your nose round the corner of that door. These gentlemen who are with you may occasionally come in if they want to—but you—git!" And she literally brought her teeth together with a snap as she pronounced these words and pointed to the door.

"You demmed she cat!" exclaimed Jamie, sorely amazed and taken aback.

It was a bad break. Jeannette snatched up a billet of wood from a heap alongside the stove (the Indian blood was showing now in addition to the Gallic), and in another second he would most assuredly have stopped it in its projected career with his head but not he ducked that turniplike growth with a smartness that did him credit and made a bolt for the door. Once in the little passage he found the other room, where Dick Townley and the scout at once set to work to make a good fire in the stove. It was a large, comfortable room, with a bed in a recess—indeed, it was Gabriel St. Denis' own room, and was as quaintly furnished as the kitchen. Only on a species of stand stood the mounted head of that now, alas! extinct monarch of the prairie, the great American bison. It was a truly grand specimen; there was an air of might and majesty in that picturesque, shaggy, fierce front. Jamie took a seat moodily near the stove and awaited an opportunity of venting his superfluous spleen on the private or the scout.

In the meantime the sergeant had gone back into the kitchen and shut the door gently behind him. He held his hat in his hands—Jamie had never removed his—and as he stood before the two women there was a look of unmistakable pain and humiliation upon his face.

The girl had gone back to the dresser and had mechanically taken up her iron, but somehow she did not seem as if she cared to meet the eyes of the sergeant. And now the latter spoke.

"I cannot tell you how ashamed and sorry I am," he began apologetically in a rather an unsteady voice, "at the annoyance you have been subjected to. The fact of the matter is, the inspector is hardly himself today. He was subjected to some slight annoyance before we came here."

And now the girl stopped her ironing and looked full upon the face of the dark, handsome featured trooper. Why should he lie for such a brute?

"Does your force produce many such specimens?" she inquired, with all traces of her former annoyance gone, but with a touch of irony in her voice.

"Only one or two, thank goodness, but they do all the mischief," was the reply. "It is not an edifying subject to talk about such men or how they come to get commissions in the force. There are, however, many officers who, if they had heard the inspector talk as he did a few minutes ago, would have knocked him down; I am certain of that. It may be presumption on my part, but I say this for the sake of many of his brother officers whom I admire and respect as men and gentlemen. Anyhow, on the half of my comrades of the rank and file, I should like to express my sense of shame and indignation at the insult which you were subjected to. It is very good of you to offer us even the next room to stay in, but you have only to say the word, and I can take it upon myself to promise that we shall quit it also."

"There is no occasion to do that," she said, her innate goodness of heart struggling with another motive.

She took a linen cuff from off the heap beside her and spread it on the dresser. How beautifully rounded and symmetrical her arm was as she poised the hot iron, and how firm and delicately finished her small hand! He thought of the many fine ladies he had known in his time who would have been jealous could they but have seen such hands.

He looked at that sweet, fair face, in which the light of truth shone, and he, who had in an erratic, stirring career seen all sorts and conditions of women, he who had experienced many strange phases of life, felt his heart go out to this girl with a great pity, which was only accentuated by a sense of his own helplessness to aid her.

There was a significant pause, only broken by the slight clicking noise of the iron as it traveled over the snowy surface of the scrubbed board. Then old Jeannette, who knew and looked with a favorable eye upon the sergeant, being somewhat mollified by the humble and deferential tone he adopted, opened a door at the far end of the room and went into another to perform, to her, some never ending domestic duties.

Then the sergeant, Harry Yorke, said somewhat awkwardly:

"I have brought you these books, Miss St. Denis. I told you of them last time I was here. I was not sure that we should call upon you, but put them in my wallets in case"—

Many a time had this man, when in a different station of life, given some lady of the great, gay world a much more significant token of regard without as much as the faintest suspicion of embarrassment, but now he felt like a schoolboy talking to a debutante or a bashful lover who is saying his first sweet thing.

"It is very good of you to have remembered the books," she remarked simply, but regarding him with a pleasant look. Then that odd, apprehensive expression which like a shadow he had seen flit across her face when they had first entered once more crossed it. As if she had nerved herself to say something she had been pondering over, she again turned as if to face him, and looking him steadily in the eyes asked:

"Are you going to wait here till my father comes back?"

He seemed ill at ease and distressed in a most unaccountable manner, this happy go lucky trooper. Indeed he looked like an awkward, hulking schoolboy in the presence of the head master, who gazes with a sinister aspect upon the spectacle of conscious guilt. He tried to look away from her, but he could not. There was evidently a struggle of some sort going on within him, of natural inclination and a sense of duty. And now these all compelling eyes seemed to have exercised their potency, for when he spoke it was, as she had willed, the plain and bitter truth.

"I cannot tell you how much against my own inclination I am here on my present errand," he said brokenly and hurriedly, "but as I see you only desire confirmation of what you already know it is no breach of trust on my part to admit that you are right in what you have hinted at."

He paused, as if there were something else on his mind which he did not rightly know if he would be justified in saying to her. Then he took a turn up and down the room, coming back to where she was standing calmly regarding him, with her two hands resting on the back of a chair, but still with that wistful look in her eyes that was pitiable to see.

After a brief pause he continued somewhat coldly, as she thought:

"I do not know that I should say what I am going to now, more especially as I think you have not treated me as you ought to have done. For a very long time the operations of your father have been known to the mounted police. For instance, they were telegraphed on by a few days ago from Fort Benton to Walsh over the Rocky Mountain Telegraph company's wire. Now, Miss St. Denis, I naturally feel somewhat mortified, though I am aware you are perfectly justified in asking me by what right I expressed such a sentiment, when I think how I have sacrificed that fine sense of duty (which should always be paramount in a man in my position) for the sake of helping your father to free himself from the dangerous connections he has made, and how my well meant warnings have been disregarded."

She did not tell him, as some other women might have done (either from mistaken motives of a subtle political nature peculiar to a woman's mind or as a matter of fact), that neither she nor her father had invited this confidence on his part or had even attempted in the very slightest degree to deceive him. Meanwhile when uninvited he had visited them. She only recognized the justice and truth of what he hinted at, and pressing her hand wearily to her forehead she waited for him to continue, which he did:

"But let us speak more plainly in order that we may not misunderstand each other. As you know, I have called several times upon your father here, just as any other civilian would, in a purely private and social capacity, and you have always been good enough to make me welcome as such. Indeed I often have been only too glad to avail myself of the opportunity your father so kindly placed at my disposal of spending an hour or two pleasantly, that would otherwise have been spent very drearily indeed in this lonely part of the country. Of course—and I am very sorry to give you pain by referring to it again—I have always been aware of the traffic your father engaged in with Montana, and I have always, so far as I could consistently with my sense of duty and ideas of what was proper as his guest, endeavored to influence him against the suicidal course he is pursuing, for such a course in the end must always prove disastrous. Indeed the very last time I was here I gave your father a very direct warning. It seems madness to me that he should have attempted another venture in the teeth of what was said on that occasion. And now we have been sent to intercept him as he comes across the lines. It will be a very serious affair for him if we be him with a contraband cargo, which he is pretty sure to have. I can assure you I dislike the painful task of arresting him only less than the necessity of having to prepare you for it."

And now the composure of the girl seemed to have deserted her. She grew very pale, and a dizziness seemed to seize her. She swayed for a moment where she stood. The trooper caught her by the arm tenderly and respectfully and placed her in a seat. Looking up, she saw the sincerity of his great pity for her in his eyes, and it moved her strangely. But she seemed to recover as she spoke to him.

"I am afraid I am rather upset," she said, with a pitiful little smile. Then, as if unconscious of the presence of any one, she involuntarily clasped her hands in front of her and moaned: "Oh, my poor father, it is all for me you do this thing! Goodness knows I would rather work from morning till night and live on a crust than have things as they are."

She remained for a few minutes as if buried in thought, with her hands nervously clasping each other on her lap and her eyes looking out tearfully and, oh, so sadly, into the blurred, hurrying snowstorm. Harry Yorke stood with his hands behind his back and a troubled expression upon his face, looking away from her into the wintry like chaos of drifting snowflakes. Once or twice the girl stirred uneasily and regarded the trooper intently as if she were studying him. Some struggle, some conflict of inclinations was going on within her. Was it her maidenly pride and that sense of duty she owed to a parent? Her knowledge of the conventionalities of life might not have been so complete as many of her more worldly wise sisters in more favored parts of the world, but her innate maiden modesty was true to itself and free from prudery. Modesty is always a powerful charm in a girl when untrammeled by false restraints. Once or twice she moved her lips as if to speak, then checked herself. After all, on what grounds could she claim the assistance or connivance of this man? He had always treated her only with that courtly and kindly respect which her instincts told her was in no way different from that which he had used toward those grand ladies of that very different world to which he had at one time belonged. But in the convent at Prince Albert she had mixed with many who were ladies, both by birth and upbringing, and as on both her father's and her mother's side she inherited that natural dignity and charm of manner that has its origin in gentle blood she perhaps showed a higher degree of refinement than generally falls to girls in her sphere of life in the Canadian northwest, so perhaps he could not well treat her otherwise. Besides, she had read much, and, what was of greater importance, she had a natural taste for the better kind of literature of a healthy and elevating tone, not the pessimistical, prurient and sickly sort that libels the present age under the false title of the society "up to date" novel. She could not presume upon any fancied regard which he might entertain for her. The very idea was nauseous. Besides, in that case what would he think of her? To throw herself upon his pity would be equally humiliating. Moreover, would it not be a direct insult to him in the honorable discharge of his duty and be assuming a certain moral laxity in his nature to ask him to help her in this emergency? She might just as well ask him, in as many words, to be false to his queen and country at once.

She placed one hand lightly upon his arm.

Our Guesses.

Most everybody recognized the picture we sent out, last week, despite the fact that the original has not worn a beard for years, and has otherwise changed in his looks. The race was to the swift, but as usual in matters requiring speed, a woman was ahead. We award the prize of the Oxford County ADVERTISER free for one year to Mrs. J. J. Emeley of South Paris, from whom we received the first correct guess of Leander S. Billings.

There are other leading citizens of Paris who look more like the guess picture than Mr. Billings does, but his looks seem easily remembered. We shall make a few more of these offers, and all will do well to be on the lookout for them, for delays are dangerous. The guesses received are:

GRAVEL CURED.

(Philadelphia, Penn., Item.)

A healthier, hearlier, happier man than John J. Neill, of 2437 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, could not be found in a day's search. The fact that he is still alive is a constant wonder to his friends.

In the fall of 1889 he began to suffer indescribable miseries from stone in the bladder. Consulting an eminent physician in Philadelphia, he was told that a surgical operation was necessary. So much did he dread the result, for if unsuccessful it meant death, that he put off the evil day as long as possible. While in this frame of mind, he heard of

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

Although disheartened, on July 1, 1893, he bought a bottle of it, and within a month had experienced beneficial results, and before he had finished the third bottle, the gravel was completely dissolved and his sufferings at an end.

Mr. Neill feels that he owes a lasting debt of gratitude to Dr Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and for disorders of the bladder and urinary organs, says "it will effect a cure in one he possible."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for rheumatism, dyspepsia and nerve troubles in which it has cured many that were considered beyond the aid of medicine. A l druggists, $1.

Norway in the Forties. No. 227.

Of Stephen Pingree an Immigrant of about 1800.

SECOND PAPER.

Stephen Pingree (5) was b. in Methuen, Mass., Aug. 7, 1752, m. Sept. 21, 1773, Ruth Hoyt of the same town and came to Norway in about 1800, where he d. April 30, 1840, aged 84 years, and is buried in the cemetery at the top of the Merrill hill. The headstone gives this date of death and his age. His age however was undoubtedly 88 years, as the date of his birth is well fixed at 1752.

As stated in the first paper, he bought a farm about two miles northwesterly from the Chapel, where the road makes a sharp turn towards the north, the farm west of Pierce's.

There was a small one-story framed house on the place. It stood then in a rough, broken opening in the wilderness, about five rods south of the present barn, where now is a fair field. In about 1850 it was sold to a Mr. Blanchard and moved up the hill to the north to the first farmhouse, where it has been used ever since as a woodshed.

In about 1825, Stephen Pingree built the present house on his homestead and immediately moved into it. When the great fire of many years ago swept over that country his barn was burned, and he built the present one, standing across the street from the house.

His farm completely surrounded his buildings, which were and are situated on the northerly half of it.

When the years had multiplied and he became old, and the hard work of life had stiffened his limbs and muscles, and the grasshopper had become a burden, he made arrangements for his oldest boy Samuel to stop with him, which he did some ten years. His grandson, Elijah Flint Jr., had charge of the old place later for some years and sold to B. C. A. Pingree (the owner of the village bakery that was burned near the academy) who was there near a quarter of a century, and who sold to the present occupant when he came to the village some twenty years ago.

The immigrant's wife, Ruth Hoyt, preceded her husband to the top of the Merrill hill, and had been waiting three years and six months when he came. The white marble says she d. Oct. 21, 1836, aged 84 years.

Stephen Pingree (5) was a Whig in politics and conservative in his views. He and his wife Mary were members of the Methodist church, were very strict in the observance of the Sabbath, and punctual attendants upon all the church services. He was an exhorter of well recognized repute in their meetings. Their religious privileges were very meager after they came to Norway. She died about the time the Chapel at the south end of that two-mile road was built, and he was an old man of 84. It is doubtful if either of them ever saw it, after hoping and wishing so many years that it might come.

He was a soldier of the Revolution and served under Washington. He received a pension.

Their first child was a girl, then came seven boys which completed the family. They were born in Mass. and N. H. and all came with or followed their parents to Norway, and were citizens of our town.

I. The immigrant's first child b. in Methuen, Mass., Aug. 20, 1774, received the name of Dolly Baker (6). She m. Elijah Flint, who was b. in Manchester, N. H., in 1772. We have seen that her father was in Manchester a short time, also in Derry fifteen miles in a southerly direction, just before coming to Norway. That marriage of Elijah Flint into the Pingree family is undoubtedly the influence that brought the Flints to Norway. Had the immigrant just before coming here, not made the short stop he did in Manchester, his girl Dolly and Elijah would probably have never met. On such slight incidents hang the largest events of our lives.

Elijah Flint and his wife, Dolly Baker, settled on a good farm, the house being the second south of Pierce's, about one mile southeasterly of her father's, near the centre of the two-mile road described in the last No. She d. there Sept. 14, 1823, aged 49 years. He lived on for thirty years longer and departed at last Aug. 3, 1853, while living with his son Samuel at the age of 81. Both buried in the Merrill hill cemetery.

The good people of that region in the early part of the century, in common with the farmers throughout the town, depended almost entirely upon the feathers plucked from their geese for the furnishing of their beds. The very finest and best, the select few from the whole lot from time to time went into the parlor-bedroom bed. Every feather for that purpose must be as white as the snow, they must come from certain parts of the goose, where the finest, lightest and most elastic of the fluffy crop is known to grow—they must be pulled after the noisy bird had fasted the appointed number of hours, and above all when that marvelous planet the moon, that told so much to our forefathers, was just of the right age! The poorer feathers, the second and third qualities, were good enough for family use.

A short time before our Dolly died she found the increasing family short of feather beds, and like a provident, faithful housewife commences at the beginning to increase her store of feathers. Obtaining the necessary eggs, she applied herself with great zeal and perseverance in efforts to convince the oldest goose that she had certain very motherly duties to perform incident to her position on the premises, and that the time to attend to them had fully arrived.

The great bird was thoughtless, forgetful and often left her place in the barn to go scolding about the premises. The watchful housewife left no method untried to teach her the duties she owed to the family. To perfect the nest she placed some ashes among the straw beneath the eggs, which unfortunately contained a spark of fire, and very many feather-beds went up in the flame and smoke of the barn. It was a great loss to farmer Elijah, and to our Dolly Baker also, and I can well imagine the house to have been short of feathers for some years.

Soon after his wife's death, Mr. Flint went to Albany two miles north of the town-house and bought a small farm, where he remained some ten years. He then returned to Norway and built a log house on a ten-acre lot of land he owned near Pierce's. He remained there, leading a sort of hermit life, until just before he died, when he went to his boy Samuel's.

Dolly Baker (Pingree) Flint (6) has four children:

1. First, Elijah Jr. (7) named for his father b. in 1802, m. Mary, daughter of Thaddeus Brown of Waterford, who was b. July 1, 1800. How convenient it must be to be born in the century year. One can always know one's age without waiting to puzzle out the figures.

Elijah Jr. lived in that corner of the town until just before the war, when he came to the village and resided in the Davis house just below Luther F. Pike's twenty years, where his wife d. Aug. 17, 1866, aged 66 y. 1 m. 16 d. When he left the village he was with Leonard Flint on the Waterford road north of Yagger, five years, then to the old homestead on the two-mile road, where he died April 6, 1878, aged 76 y. 7 m. He then joined his wife at the top of Merrill hill.

At one time during the war, the citizens of the village for some reason became alarmed concerning their safety, whether from burglars or the enemy in arms I do not know. The scare however was thought to be a serious one, and so to protect their village from fire and themselves and families from a midnight raid, Judge Virgin, who was then a prominent attorney in our village, and other leading citizens hired our Elijah to do guard duty one night, for by that time they thought the great danger would be past.

He appeared at nine o'clock as directed, was provided with a soldier's outfit, including a Springfield musket, with fixed bayonet, and was directed to patrol Main Street from the bridge at the Falls to a spot near the grist mill house (the same small house as now standing near the mill) at the upper end of the village. He was to march steadily and constantly from one end of his beat to the other, and at the bridge and the mill he was to halt for a moment, take a careful survey of the situation to see that the country was safe, ground arms that he might the more fully expand his lungs and in a loud voice cry "All's well!" This cry, to make it more emphatic and that the sleepy people in their exposed situation at either end of the village should be more sure to hear that they might afterward sleep in greater peace, he was to repeat once.

He performed his duty promptly and with dispatch. His sounding footsteps were heard the length of the street, in heavy and regular tramp, and for one night at least the good denizens of Main Street felt they were safe from "war's alarms."

Now at that time, there was a stout old miller by the name of Palmer living in the mill house, whose voice on occasion could roar like a lion, and it so chanced that he was out late that night, and came home near one, irritable and disturbed. The world had not gone well, it had ruffled his temper, broken his peace of mind, and he felt altogether in a rebellious humor.

After trying all sides of his pillow, the afflicted man slept at last, only to be waked a few minutes later by the stentorian voice of the village guardsman crying, apparently beneath his window, "All's well!" He came up on his elbow, not quite knowing whether the voice was outside of his room or in it, and was still uncertain when the great voice once more rang out on the night air, as though in very mockery of his woes "All's well!!"

The ancient millman was sure that his cup of calamities was now full. To cry any words at such a time of the night to destroy his peace was bad enough! but to cry into his ears such words when his miseries and misfortunes were overflowing was more than he ought to, or would bear. Springing from the bed, lifting the window, thrusting his head and shoulders into the night air, he roared out, Here, you —— get out of this, or by —— it won't be well with you!

It is said by those who were awake about two that night that the steps of the guard as he went down street were short and spiteful, as though he were in great haste to reach the Falls, as if possibly, the vigilant fellow had heard the enemy to the southward, and was on the double quick to resist an invasion in that direction.

Judge Virgin and his friends were quite sure they had received the full worth of their money in the protection afforded the village, and especially in the tramp of the guard and the incidents connected with it that so effectually broke the monotony of village life for a season.

Elijah Flint Jr. and his wife Mary had one child, Melinda (8) b. March — 1835, d. Sept. 25, 1838. The family ceased to be when the old guardsman was finally mustered out.

2. Second of Dolly Baker (Pingree) Flint (6) b. Aug. 17, 1805, in the house that stood where Chester French now lives, received the name of Samuel (7). In June 1831, he m. 1st Hannah Frost b. Aug. 14, 1808. She was the daughter of Joel, who settled near Ward Noyes'. He spent his life farming on the two-mile road. His wife d. Feb. 15, 1869, and he m. 2d in 1871, Emily (Cole) Nichols. He d. Aug. 17, 1878. His 2d wife d. Aug. 2, 1893, aged 80 y. 2 m. 8 d. They are buried in the Chapel cemetery.

Samuel Flint (7) has nine children:

First, Susan Ellen (8) b. June 2, 1832, d. of consumption Dec. 30, 1848. She went to the Merrill cemetery, but later joined her kin near the Chapel.

Second, David Frost (8) b. May 4, 1834, m. Ella M. Shaw, daughter of James of Waterford. They lived in Lawrence, Mass., 10 years, then returned to the old homestead in Norway, where he d. six years ago. No children.

Third, Mary Ann (8) b. April 5, 1836, d. of typhoid fever Nov. 1, 1854.

Fourth, Adelia Louisa (8) b. Feb. 7, 1838, m. Mathew Collins, a brick-maker of Norway. She d. Sept. 18, 1860, of typhoid fever. He afterwards resided on the Waterford road where Leonard Flint now lives. No children.

Fifth, Hannah Orinda (8) b. April 20, 1840, m. Fidellus Stearns Sept. 27, 1880. He is a farmer at Milan, N. H. No children of their own. An adopted daughter, Edna May, b. Aug. 25, 1884.

Sixth, Harriet Robinson (8) b. Jan. 20, 1842, m. April 21, 1858, Appleton Blake of Milan, N. H., who was living in Norway at that time. He lost a leg at the hip when young by a falling tree. He keeps a grocery store at Milan. No children.

Seventh, Gustava (8) b. April 20, 1843, d. March 28, 1873 of consumption. Was never married.

Eighth, Harlan Samuel (8) b. Nov. 14, 1844, m. July 23, 1871, Mary Ellen Pingree, the daughter of Wm. S. of the village. This is the Harlan Flint so well known in our town for a score of years, and is the only representative here today of his father's family of nine children. He was born in the house he now occupies, and where he has always lived, on the northerly half of the two-mile road. He has six children:

1st, Hannah Belle (9) b. Oct. 7, 1872, d. July 2, 1874.

2d, Della May (9) b. Oct. 11, 1874, m. Feb. 22, 1894, Andrew J. Haskell, son of Peter of East Waterford. They have one child, Florence Eleanor (10) b. Sept. 24, 1895. The first one of the tenth generation I have found in the Pingree family.

3d, Leslie Harlan (9) b. March 27, 1877.
4th, Asa Pool (9) b. April 16, 1880.
5th, Guy Irving (9) b. Jan. 12, 1886.
6th, Catherine Laurana (9) b. in 1893.

Ninth and last of Samuel Flint (7) Joshua Frost (8) b. Aug. 26, 1851. Residence West Andover, Mass. Is unmarried.

I have a poem before me of twenty-three stanzas written by the sixth child of this family, Hattie R. I quote:

"In the good old town of Norway,
Maine was the name of the state,
Oxford was the county too,
June, eighteen thirty-one the date.
Samuel Flint and Hannah Frost
Made solemn vows for life,
And the Rev. Henry A. Merrill
Pronounced them man and wife."

She describes the household duties, the children's amusements, the schools, farm life, the meeting service, and says they all hurried home from church for they were sure mother would have the table spread, and says

"Pork and beans, Indian pudding,
Apple sauce and bread,
Ever was the Sunday meal
On which they all were fed."

These four last verses are worthy of a place here as a matter of history. Many a Norway family in those times was fed on a similar "food of the gods."

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA

Alexander Salvini, the Great Actor, says Dr. Greene's Nervura Cures.

What he says Means Health to You if You Use This Grandest and Surest of all Medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura.

ALEXANDER SALVINI.

The word of an illustrious actor, like that of a great general or statesman, commands the attention of the world.

Alexander Salvini, son of the greatest actor that ever lived, is rapidly taking his father's place in the minds and hearts of the people. Every word of his, therefore, like the utterances of Jefferson or Irving, whom everybody honors and reveres, will be read with deepest interest and profoundest attention by all.

Mr. Salvini writes to the people:—

"Travelling as I do, I cannot fail to notice the great use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and especially among my friends and acquaintances.

"From my own experience, I can strongly recommend it as a most excellent and reliable family remedy, especially for rheumatism and neuralgia, nervousness and all nervous affections, which illnesses in our profession, we are most liable to contract."

Weak nerves, poor blood, low vitality, rheumatism and neuralgia, are the bane of life, the thief of comfort, the destroyer of happiness. It is the height of folly to suffer when a cure is easy, sure and speedy by using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Use this great and wonderful remedy and the nervous, irritable, weak and trembling feelings will disappear; your sleep will be natural, calm, restful, and you will wake mornings feeling strong and vigorous instead of tired and exhausted; all gloomy depression and sense of anxiety will fade from the mind; your nerves will become strong and steady as steel, your strength, energy and ambition will be restored, and perfect health take the place of weakness and debility.

This remarkable discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, should not be classed with ordinary patent medicines. It is the prescription of the most successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., and he can be consulted by all without charge, personally or by letter.

The little daughter of Mr. Fred Webber, Holland, Mass., had a very bad cold and cough which he had not been able to cure with any thing. I gave him a 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, says W. P. Holden, merchant and postmaster at West Brimfield, and the next time I saw him he said it worked like a charm. This remedy is intended especially for acute throat and lung diseases such as colds, croup and whooping cough, and it is famous for its cures. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by Noyes Drug Store. 6-9

DENMARK.

His Honor, Mayor Pingree of Detroit, has provided himself with a mascot and must now prove irresistible. He recently sent to some people in Denmark, Me., to obtain for him two flint-lock guns that originally belonged to his father. He offered to give $25 to the present owner of the guns and $25 to the Congregational church for them. The guns were forthcoming and it really did not need the cash to get them. Denmark is for Mayor Pingree for everything that he wants, superannuated muskets and the governorship of Michigan included.—[Exchange.

If we could trace Dyspepsia to its source, it would lead back to our kitchens. In fact, the secret of good health is good cooking. If well cooked, foods are partially digested; if poorly cooked, they are less digestible than in their raw state. If you are a victim of faulty cooking; that is, if you suffer from Dyspepsia, the rational cure must be looked for in an artificially digested food, and a food which will at the same time aid the digestion of other foods. Such a preparation virtually rests the tired digestive organs, thereby restoring them to their natural strength.

The Digestive Cordial, as prepared by the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, is just such a preparation, and a single 10 cent bottle will convince you of its value. If your druggist doesn't keep it, he will be glad to get it through his wholesale house.

Though robust health ever a stranger to my poor self, and doubly strange as age creeps on apace, yet some pleasures are still in store for me, even now. Some of the pleasures which I heartily enjoy are my frequent visits to a neighbor, O. R. Hall, M. D. He having become nearly blind, on these occasions my time is spent in reading aloud, or listening to the doctor, whose mind is wonderfully stored with historical and political knowledge. Always a student, with a remarkable retentive memory, with a fine command of language, it is pleasant and instructive to listen. Beside, he is one of nature's gentlemen, instantly placing one at ease, strangely in contrast to the man of assumed knowledge, whose airs of superiority will immediately and effectually crush the modest man. Yes, we exchange sentiments, his refined, mine crude. He is the teacher, I am the pupil.

C. D. Morse went to Portland, last week on business.

School closed last Friday, after a very pleasant term, taught by Louise M. Brown.

We understand Frank Millett and wife entertained a stranger last week, a fine boy.

Dr. Herbert Bennett.

Dr. Herbert Bennett, a native of Buckfield, died at the Hahnemann Hospital, Feb. 3. His remains were brought to his old home in Buckfield, where his mother now lives. The burial occurred Friday.

Dr. Bennett went to Chicago from Boston, Mass., 5 years ago, at which time he entered the Hahnemann Medical College, and graduated with the class of '95. Standing the highest in a competitive examination, he was appointed physician in the free dispensary, and would have been appointed soon a member of the corps of physicians in the hospital connected with the Hahnemann College. He lived for some time in Park Ridge, with his sister, who was a student in the college, now a practicing physician in Norway.

The cause of his death was blood poisoning, an extended account of which, together with his picture if published in the Chicago Tribune of Feb. 8th. From the account we take the following, that will be read with interest by his many friends in Oxford County:

"A slight puncture of the skin on the forefinger with a surgeon's needle, that had been used in a post-mortem examination of a patient who had died of septic peritonitis, caused the sudden death of Dr. Herbert Bennett, a physician in the free dispensary of the Hahnemann Medical College.

Dr. Bennett was asked to assist in the examination, which was made on Sunday morning at the request of the health department. The patient, who was in the Hahnemann Hospital, died Saturday night. During the post-mortem examination, Dr. Bennett accidentally pricked his finger with a needle used in the operation. The doctor was unable to locate the cut, and on account of its insignificance he paid little attention to it. Until early Monday morning he thought no more of the matter. At noon on Monday he was found to have considerable fever. At 4 o'clock he left his work in the dispensary and Dr. A. K. Crawford was called.

His condition was not at that time considered serious, and a few minutes afterward he called for something to eat: At 6 o'clock he was given an alcohol bath, and told the nurse he felt much better. In a quarter of an hour he informed the nurse he was not so well. Before the nurse could reach him he had fallen back unconscious, and died within ten minutes without regaining consciousness. His death caused much grief in the college and hospital, where he was well-known and well liked."

A Poetical Truth.

No matter at all what may befall, what disasters are flying about, the newspaper man somehow will plan to get his paper out. An earthquake shock may to smithereens knock the printing house brick and plaster; yet the paper is there with a headline scare and details of disaster. Printers may strike and strive as they like till the issue may seem in doubt; forms may "pi" and editors may die, but the paper will still come out. Accidents dire may happen and fire devour each press and frame, but if the whole town itself burnt down the paper comes out the same. There's only one way—when folks don't pay for their paper is gone up the spout, for There's nothing on earth save the long green's dearth, keeps the paper from coming out!—Puck.

Children's Corner.

North Newry, Feb. 11, 1896.

DEAR EDITOR.—I am a little girl eight years old. My mamma takes the ADVERTISER and I like to read the children's letters very much. I have three little sisters, their names are Grace, Lucy and Mildred. If this escapes the waste basket I will write again sometime. MINNIE M. EAGLE.

Bethel, Feb. 10, 1896.

DEAR EDITOR.—Our school closed last Friday and I took part in two rooms. I like my new mamma. I studied at home a little while. I have a blackboard, a map, a bird, a cow, a horse and an organ. I am going to take music lessons. I am glad that our school has closed. From your friend, ANNA KIMBALL.

Lovell, Maine, Feb. 3d, 1896.

DEAR ADVERTISER:—I have wrote to you once before and as it escaped the waste basket, I will try it again. We have been having an open winter here, but there have been two snow storms lately so I guess we shall see a little cold weather yet. I am going to tell the readers now what my grandmother, Mrs. Ruth Lord, has done this winter. She has spun seventy skeins of yarn and knit twelve pairs of footings, five pairs of mittens and one pair of stockings, besides some sewing and doing all of her housework for a family of three. She did most of her spinning sitting in her chair, as she was too lame to stand. She is in her eightieth year. It has been very sickly around here, this winter, and there have been several deaths. We haven't had any snow to speak of until lately. I will close with a conundrum, What roof covers the most noisy tenant? ARISTEEN A. LORD.

There is no snow here

A CARD.

No chromos, silverware, furniture or books go forth from our store under the guise of presents, when they are in reality paid for in extra profit on the goods bought.

For instance, when you invest $10 in clothing we think you want $10 worth of goods, and not $9 worth of goods and a $1 premium.

We will guarantee that when you have purchased enough at our store to entitle you to a premium at other stores, you will have saved more than the amount of the premium twice over. A dollar saved is a dollar earned. Hence by trading with us you can increase your earnings.

We have always sold grods for as small profit as any store can and meet its obligations,—in fact lower than any store in Oxford County. This all shrewd buyers will bear witness to. If we were to give away premiums each year to the amount of $500 it would mean just that amount more of expense, and we would have to do as all the other stores that give away premiums do,—tack on more profit, and when you bought clothing you would pay for the premium.

: : REMEMBER : :

If you wish to pay for clothes and receive premiums go to some other store. If you wish to pay for clothes and receive clothes come to us.
